Here are some actionable Earth Day tips to make REAL changes in your life.

1. Avoid Disposable Plastic

Problem: Single-use plastic takes more than 500 years to decompose. In the meantime, straws, plastic bags, and six-pack rings continue to pollute the environment and hurt marine life.

Solution: Use alternatives to disposable plastic — items made of wood, glass, ceramic, or stainless steel.

Action: When you go to the gym or the beach, think of Mother Earth and fill up a permanent water bottle. Bring your canvas bag when shopping for groceries. Banish the disposable cups from the office and use a nice ceramic coffee set instead.

Avoiding disposable/single-use plastics is probably the best sustainable living choice that a single individual can make.

Straws are practical, especially in cars and while traveling, not to mention refreshing summer cocktails. But straws don't need to end up in the ocean. Switch to reusable ones made from stainless steel, silicone, or bamboo.

The sea turtles will be grateful.

2. Eat Local

Problem: Processed food in the U.S. travels over 1,300 miles while fresh produce takes about 1,500 miles to get to your table. That's a lot of carbon emissions from transport, storage, and refrigerating.

Solution: Eat more locally-grown food.

Action: Eating local not only supports local farmers and venues, but your food travels less from farm to table. Less "food miles" means fewer carbon emissions. Vegetables that are organically grown on small family farms are not only free from pesticides but also taste better and have more nutrients. Celebrate Earth Day by making a feast on which you'll serve only locally grown food.

3. Choose Online Billing

Problem: About 1 billion trees worth of paper are thrown away every year in the U.S. A large part of these is utility bills, brochures, and catalogs that no one ever reads.

Solution: Opt for online billing and cancel unnecessary subscriptions.

Action: Utility providers, cable, companies, and banks let you choose to receive online statements or printed ones. Help our planet recover from trash by choosing online statements. Not all localities have developed recycling networks, so this also reduces the amount of paper that goes to landfills. If you get a lot of unwanted catalogs and brochures, at least make sure that paper ends up in the recycling bin.

4. Buy Green Products

Problem: Non-recyclable waste is becoming a major issue in every corner of the world. A study shows that during the lockdown packaging waste has increased by 53%. Now is the time to settle the score.

Solution: Keep an eye on what goes into your shopping cart and give priority to sustainable products.

Action: Instead of single-use, disposable items, look for eco-friendly products that are reusable, second-hand, sustainably sourced, or made of recycled materials. For example, a bar of sustainable soap in the paper wrap is way better for the environment than a bottled shower gel with microplastic particles.

5. Plant Trees

Problem: At the current deforestation rate, the world's rainforests could completely disappear by 2100. Forests trap carbon dioxide and prevent soil erosion, but are also home to the most diverse ecosystems.

Solution: Every one of us should use every opportunity to plant and nurture a tree.

Action: This one is pretty simple — plant a tree.
